From watering the pitches to organising football fun days; the winner of the Good Citizen Award really has the beautiful game running through his veins.

Terry Buller, former chairman of Sherborne St John Football Club, has been nurturing young talent and been the lynchpin of the club for many years.

The judges were impressed with the 63-year-old's "amazing impact on the overall community" and his tireless work to ensure the pitches are kept in tip-top condition, so they can be used for football and other activities for the wider community.

Mr Buller who lives in Heron Park, Chineham said he was very humbled by the award.

"I really didn't think I would win," he said. "But have really enjoyed the night and I am happy to be going home with the award."

Mr Buller also wished to thank Penny Luke, who nominated him, and all at the football club who have helped and supported him in his work over the years.
